

BUSH'S IRRATIONALITY KILLS MILLIONS

“It was announced today,” said Dr. Steven Porter in a statement issued from his home, “that President Bush will again veto the stem cell research bill. In this, he will again be supported by our very own Congressman Phil English.” Porter who opposes English, continued by saying, “Both English and Bush are absolutely irrational, and their irrationality and philosophical hypocrisy are killing millions of people.”

Porter went on to explain his view.

“On the one hand, we have the Bush-English camp sending soldier after soldier to their deaths in a needless war in Iraq, a war instigated by lies and the greed for oil, power, and control which runs the Republican White House. On the other hand, we have the very same camp preventing the stem cell research which might save millions of lives because, as they claim, they cannot violate the sanctity of a frozen cell. It is lunacy of the first waters: a lunacy which kills at both ends of a warped philosophical spectrum. It is apparently fine and noble to slaughter our troops and innocent Iraqi civilians in the lust for American global domination, and also fine and noble to kill people suffering from deadly diseases in order to placate a religious aversion.

“How the American people can abide the horrors of the Bush-English camp is beyond me. How the American media can sit by and watch the carnage is also beyond me. In the long run, if the supporters of the Bush-English camp die needlessly in Iraq or needlessly in the diabetes and cancer wards of our hospitals, they will only get what they voted for. The problem is that they will take a lot of people with them who do not support their philosophy or misplaced religious fervor.

“It was a tragedy of monumental proportions when Bush stole the 2000 election and when Phil English fooled the people of PA-03 into electing him, a tragedy which only now is beginning to reveal its true dimensions.”
